In the letter D, fo. 109, are depicted the Three persons of the Trinity, after the usual conventional form; the Father and Son are seated, an open volume rests upon the knees of both figures, whilst in the centre is the Dove descending. Behind them is stretched a drapery of blue, heightened with gold. Surrounding this page is a border composed of flowers, similar to that above described at fo. 1, and disposed in a bold and effective manner. In the lower margin, is a representation of a peacock displaying his plumage, with a monkey and an owl on either fide, very nicely painted. Of the remaining initial letters at ff. 19, 32, 45, 58, 74 and 91, it will be sufficient...
